

In February 2010 Ron and Larry of the Black Jew Dialogues visited the University of New England and from the moment they stepped out of their car I knew their visit was going to be a great and wild ride. From the moment Ron and Larry stepped out of their car I also knew it was going to be a great show.

I was not disappointed.

Every expectation of the show was met and then exceeded. I am the president of a club on campus that deals with social problems both on a global scale and on a local scale. I was amazed at how well Ron and Larry incorporated serious issues like prejudice and injustice in a fun show. The performance incorporated the right amount of seriousness, humor, awareness and dialogue that the audience left feeling educated and a little bit more socially aware.

Even nine months later, there are still students talking about the show and its impacts.

I would recommend the Black Jew Dialogues performance to any school, organization or institution that wishes to bring about awareness and education to their students. Their performance was out of this world and it was a honor to have them at the University of New England.

Patrick Burnham
University of New England
President of We Are Responsible
Class of 2012
pburnham@une.edu